TOWN OF NORTHFIELD COLLECTION

Historical Note:

In 1673 as the first white English colonists arrived in the area that would become known as Northfield, the Pocumtuc tribe then living there called their village Squawkeag. Though the local Indian peoples resisted white settlement and more than once white colonists fled south to avoid death or captivity, by 1723 the town of Northfield was officially incorporated. Well into the next century, the town prospered as an agricultural community. Many Northfield farmers also worked as skilled tradesmen, such as the builder Calvin Stearns (1778-1857), the man responsible for several of the early-nineteenth century houses that still grace the town's historical Main Street. Later in the nineteenth century, the evangelist Dwight Moody returned to his hometown to open the Northfield School for Girls (1879). For years, Moody also hosted religious conferences that brought thousands of visitors to Northfield each summer which in turn led the town into its "resort" phase, particularly after construction of the Northfield Hotel in 1887. While the schools (Moody opened the Mount Hermon School for Boys across the river in Gill in 1881) and the summer revivals provided increased employment opportunity, agriculture would remain an important part of Northfield's general prosperity into the twentieth century. After World War II, as local agriculture went into decline, increasing numbers of "Northfielders" would commute to work outside of town but the sense of community would be maintained through town institutions such as the library, the elementary school, and its churches. Today, Northfield remains a vibrant community, proud of its long history on the banks of the Connecticut River.

Scope and Content Note:

The Town of Northfield Collection is a rather eclectic one, reflecting all manner of Northfield activities, as a town and by individuals. There are library, church and school records, some personal papers, and much documentation of town celebrations and club activities.

The Town of Northfield Collection is divided into the following series:

- I. TOWN OF NORTHFIELD
- II. NORTHFIELD PEOPLE
- III. CHURCHES
- IV. SCHOOLS
- V. CLUBS and ASSOCIATIONS
- VI. PUBLICATIONS and UNPUBLISHED DOCUMENTS
- VII. ORIGINAL ARCHIVAL RECORDS
- VIII. PHOTOGRAPHS and OTHER IMAGES
- IX. AUDIOVISUAL MATERIALS
- X. OVERSIZE
